4 Simplified outline

This Determination implements the ADF Military Factor framework.

Under the ADF Military Factor framework, eligibility for an allowance is assessed daily and only one allowance can be paid on each day. Special rules exist (section A.1.5) which deal with when a member is eligible for more than one allowance on a day.

Each allowance is given a Military Factor tier, which is used to determine the rate of the allowance to be paid. Depending on the tier, allowances are based on either an annual rate, or a daily rate. Regardless, allowances are paid daily (section A.1.7).

Part A sets out the administration of the ADF Military Factor framework, and includes Annex A.1, which sets out the Military Factor tiers and the corresponding rates payable.

Part B sets out the allowances that recognise the responsibilities and disabilities associated with different aspects of military service and includes Annex B.1, which sets out considerations relevant to elements of hardship that members who live and work in field conditions are subjected to.

Annex B.1: Levels of hardship

Considerations relevant to each element of hardship are set out in the following table. The standards and examples contained below are not considered an exhaustive list of potential scenarios. Delegates should exercise discretion and best judgement when selecting levels of hardship.

Element	Level of hardship	Standard of level of hardship
Living conditions This element rates the level of hardship of the living and sleeping conditions of the field activity.	Extreme	Accommodation if it exists at all is at subsistence levels. Considerations include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. The accommodation is limited to individual or small group resources; and b. The accommodation is non-permanent. Example: Sleeping in individual or small group tents where individuals have little protection from the elements.
	Intermediate	Accommodation has better protection from the elements than the extreme level. Accommodation offers moderate protection from the elements. Example: Tents with rigid poles or rudimentary fixed structures (ie. huts, sheds). Shelters offer moderate protection from the elements however lacks substantial insulation.
	Low	Fixed accommodation includes permanent or semi-permanent buildings or purpose built structures that are suitable for accommodation purposes and in habitable condition. Example: Barracks, cabins or habitable shipping containers.
Working conditions This element rates the working conditions sustained by members during the field activity.	Extreme	Extreme working conditions include extended exposure to disabilities and very limited, or no opportunity, for relief and typically involve: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. Regular exposure to humidity, water, dust, mud or dirt; b. Regular and significant exposure to weather; c. Frequent exposure to hazards not normally experienced in the barracks environment; d. Strenuous physical activity may be required for extended periods; and e. There is very limited opportunity to rest during activities.
	Intermediate	Medium working conditions are demonstrably more difficult and demanding than those experienced in barracks. The working conditions involve some exposure to such factors as adverse weather conditions or demanding physical activity. There is little opportunity for relief from such conditions during the working day; work continues regardless.
	Low	Low level hardship working conditions are those that are generally normal and reflect those that apply in the barracks or workplace. The normal workplace involves occasional adverse working conditions.

Eating arrangements This element rates the level of food and food preparation arrangements provided during the field activity.	Extreme	No facilities are provided for the preparation or consumption of rations. Considerations include: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Meals are prepared by individuals or small groups, from rations; Meals are prepared and consumed under adverse conditions; or The quality, quantity and regularity of meals vary.
	Intermediate	Limited facilities are provided for the preparation or consumption of rations. Considerations include: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Food is prepared and consumed under temporary arrangements, such as a field kitchen; Any facilities provided are not purpose designed or members may have to assist in the preparation of their food; or Under these temporary arrangements, rationing conditions are demonstrably inferior to those in barracks.
	Low	Food is normally prepared by dedicated staff in purpose designed facilities. These fixed facilities provide arrangements similar to those in barracks, although the style and variety of meals may be limited.
Leisure This elements rates the access to entertainment, leisure or recreational activities and includes access to the internet, external communication, recreational facilities and effective use of non-working time	Extreme	This level is characterised by the almost total lack of any meaningful leisure time. Considerations include: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> There is little or no ability to access to the internet or external communication; Any time off is so restricted or irregular that it does not relieve the effects of the disabilities of field service; or No recreational resources are available.
	Intermediate	Individuals have limited access to leisure, but are clearly disadvantaged when compared with the normal barracks environment. Considerations include: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Access to the internet or external communication is limited or inconsistently available; Some time off may be given outside of work or sleep but is limited or irregular; and There is limited access to recreational resources.
	Low	Facilities may be of a lesser standard than those enjoyed in barracks, but individuals are not significantly disadvantaged. Considerations include: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> There is reasonable access to the internet or external communication; and Leisure time is available and some resources are provided for use.

Facilities and services This element rates the access to facilities such as showers and toilets; as well as services such as water and electricity.	Extreme	Facilities and services are generally absent or not available for consistent use. Considerations include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. Water would normally be individually carried or transported, or be obtained from local resources; and b. Toilet facilities consist of trenches, holes or similar.
	Intermediate	Facilities and services may be provided, but are deficient. Considerations include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. Ablutions and toilets may be temporary facilities provided in situ. b. Permanent hot water is not available or restricted; and c. Electricity is provided by a generator and its use is limited. The net effect of these deficiencies causes individuals to be demonstrably disadvantaged when compared with the barracks standard of facilities and services.
	Low	Facilities and services are similar to those provided in barracks, although not necessarily to the same standard. There is access to fixed ablutions and toilets facilities where hot and cold running water is provided.
Hours of work This element rates the level of hardship based on the length of the working day.	Extreme	Working hours are extreme and greatly exceeds than those in barracks. Considerations include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. There is a sustained requirement in each 24 hour period to undertake duty for 16 hours or more; and b. Access to rest is very limited and irregular. Example: Members' rest is disturbed by the requirement to carry out sentry duty or operate a radio shift.
	Intermediate	Working hours exceeds than those in barracks. Considerations include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. There is a sustained requirement in each 24 hour period to undertake duty between 12 to 16 hours; and b. There is regular access to rest but may be interrupted by occasional duty.
	Low	The structure of the working day generally differs little from that experienced in the barracks workplace. Work may be hard, and may involve extended hours (between 8 to 10 hours) on some days, but the cumulative effect does not lead to a significant hardship for members.
